UK-based Times Higher Education Includes

Five Big Ideas in Textbook Guide

The prestigious Times Higher Education, a London-based weekly magazine that is regarded as a global authority on higher education, has included Five Big Ideas for Effective Teaching: Connecting Mind, Brain, and Education Research to Classroom Practice (Teachers College Press, 2013) on its list of suggested textbooks for the education field.

Five Big Ideas for Effective Teaching, written by Donna Wilson and Marcus Conyers, was among a select group of books to have been included in Times Higher Education's Textbook Guide for the education category. The list was compiled by Sandra Leaton Gray, a senior lecturer for the Institute of Education at the University of London, who noted that “many of the titles dealing with global or international issues stand head and shoulders above the rest in terms of competent use of research and fresh analysis.”

The Textbook Guide for the education category features publications from a wide variety of publishers, many of whom are based in Europe. Five Big Ideas was one of only eight books on the list published by Teachers College Press and was the only book on the list to focus on mind, brain, and education research as it relates to teaching.

Times Higher Education is the UK's leading publication reporting on news and issues in the higher education field. It is well known for the Times Higher Education

World University Rankings, which it publishes each year. For a complete list of books included in the Times Higher Education's Textbook Guide for Education, visit the following link: <http://www.timeshighereducation.co.uk/story.aspx?storyCode=2008666>
